INTRODUCTION

Almost every activity that we do in our daily lives have an impact on environment be it positive or negative. It's well known that the biggest threat 21st century faces is of climate change. It would be inappropriate to say that only particular type of industries or factories emitting pollutants are to be majorly held responsible for the same. The need of the hour is; no matter what field or profession one belongs to, he or she needs to be environmentally conscious and protecting environment is our individual social responsibility. Unarguably sustainable development is the key for which the government has laid down numerous rules and regulations. Having rules is one thing and abiding them by being consciously aware is another. It becomes even more significant to remain aware about such rules especially when they carry criminal sanction for avoiding them. Environmental norms are industry specific. Hospitality industry might have to follow norms different than of construction industry and that of textile industry. There are certain specific set of standards that ought to be followed. Ignorance of law not being an excuse and possibility of knowing all such standards by the of professionals working the industry being very less MNLU Mumbai considers its social responsibility to bridge this gap. A step towards bridging this gap is the Two days' Workshop cum Certificate Course on Environmental law for professionals, freelancers, consultants etc.
