Why this Course

Interface between ICT and human conduct is inevitable by virtue of industries, institutions, companies' public or private etc. related to scientific innovations, information processing, knowledge sharing, decision making, research activity, services, business activities, education, employment, law, governance etc. As reliance on Information Communication Technology increases day by day it becomes even more significant to assess the legality and validity of technology assisting and influencing human conduct. Persons working in technical fields are less likely to know about the applicability and nuances in law. On the other hand Ignorance of law is no excuse.
