The teacher would be attached to a 'team' in the firm, that is, so that they get the world of the partner, principal/senior associate and the associates. Teachers should shadow in pairs, not alone.

NDA's will be signed by each teacher with the firm. Wherever possible the practice area of firms would be matched with the subject of the teacher E.g. a Property Law teacher could shadow the real estate team.

The participating firms will need to assign a teacher-pair to a team which is mandated to include the teachers in the following activities:

- Internal meetings
- Email communication
- Due diligence work
- Client meetings
- Drafting and document review work

Teachers must participate in the above by 'shadowing' one or more team members.

Teachers should perform at least one individual assignment provided by the law firm (to get a sense of the experience of being a law firm associate. This is critical).

For example, the tasks could be one of the following:

- Due Diligence
- Review a contract
- Build a transaction structure
- Prepare an advisory note or a strategy

Teachers must also have an interaction with the business development, knowledge-management and HR team (where available) of the firm to understand the following aspects:

- How law firms build clients and get business (these can be in the background while teachers teach)
- From HR, to speak about issues related to discipline, culture, performance management, work-life balance, growth, handling criticism, etc. that young lawyers face. This will enable teachers to incorporate and connect these aspects in the formative years of a law students' journey.

*A report to be submitted on next day, i.e. 6th day
